Rhododendron maximum

Annan & Swan

FLORA

AMERICA

Septentrionalis

Part II.

The scenery of this country is [illegible] unparalleled, not less by the grandeur of its mountains, the impetuous and picturesque appearance of its mountains, its rocky precipices, its dense streams and lakes; than it is by the magnificent clothing of wild shrubs and trees, the [illegible] luxury of which, gives to rough and [illegible] objects a richness, that [illegible] The Kalmia, described in our first volume, and the Rhodadendron of the present article, which are reared with care and difficulty as ornaments of European gardens and pleasure grounds, can be seen in perfection no where but in the uncultivated recesses of our own continent.